Topic:-Some people think that children should learn how to cook at school. Do you agree or disagree?

There is an ongoing debate about whether cooking should be taught in schools. While some believe it is not a necessary subject, others argue that it is an essential life skill. In my opinion, I strongly agree that children should learn how to cook at school.

One strong reason to support this view is that cooking promotes independence. When children learn how to prepare meals, they become more capable of taking care of themselves in the future. For example, university students who know how to cook are less likely to rely on unhealthy fast food.

Another important point is that cooking can lead to healthier eating habits. Students who understand ingredients and nutrition are more likely to make better food choices. For instance, they may choose to eat fruits and vegetables instead of snacks full of sugar or fat.

In conclusion, teaching cooking in schools can help students become independent and adopt healthy lifestyles. Therefore, I believe that cooking should definitely be a part of the school curriculum.
